| Ementa: This course is about novels in English, and particularly about the structure of individual novels and their relationship to a tradition. In this course students will study a wide range of works from the nineteenth century to the present and from Great Britain to Canada and North America. The course traces the formal and thematic developments of the novel, focusing on the innovations in the novel's form, fiction's engagement with history, the constitution of what Umberto Eco calls “the infinity of lists”, and the changing place of literature in global culture. There will also be reference to the wide range of topics and wide variety of critical methodology associated with the practice of Fiction Studies. The teaching method will consist of seminars, lectures and, above all, class discussions, including an oral presentation by each student. | | | |
